Sherry

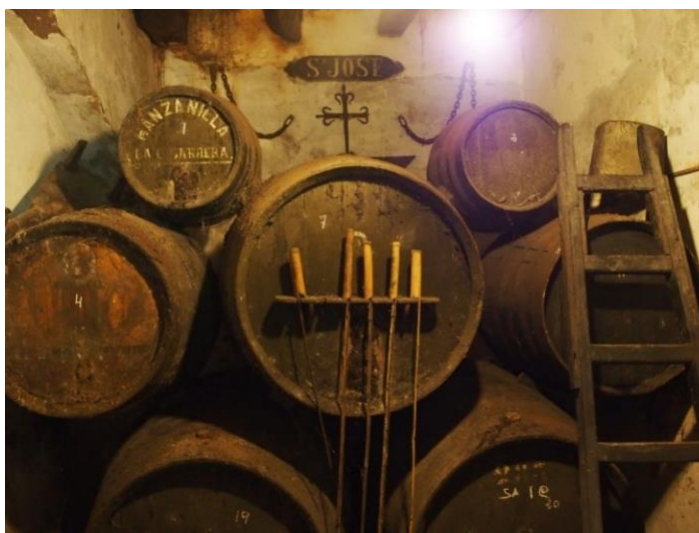

Montserrat Molina, capataz of Barbadillo.

Manzanilla Manzanillas are delicate finos that must be aged in the town of Sanlúcar de Barrameda, known for its breezy seaside climate that's perfect for aging refined sherry. Pasadas are aged for an extended period to the point where the flor is thin and patchy. En ramos are sherries bottled straight from the cask with minimal fining or filtering.

Amontillado An amontillado spends the first part of its life under flor. The flor then dies and it finishes aging in contact with oxygen, thus expressing flavors of yeast and salinity in addition to oxidative nutty notes.

Palo Cortado A fino gone mad and decides it just doesn't want to be a fino! This style generally loses its flor sooner than an amontillado so the flavors of yeast and salinity can be less pronounced and the wine a bit fuller in body. These wines finish aging oxidatively. Palo cortados should have the finesse of a fino with the body of an oloroso. They are the rarest style of sherry and a special treat to try.

Grapes drying on straw mats in the sun for making PX.

Pedro Ximénez Pedro ximénez sherry (or PX) is made from pedro ximénez grapes that have been dried in the sun to concentrate their sugars. They are sweet and luscious. Unlike other sherry styles, PX gets lighter in body and alcohol as it ages, as the high sugar content allows the alcohol to evaporate faster than the water content. Very old vintages are light and velvety in the mouth and extremely rare.

Extra special tasting with Eduardo Ojeda!

A note about disgorgement dates...

The disgorgement date is when the dead yeast cells (lees) of a sparkling wine that was second fermented in the bottle are removed. The same wine disgorged at different times may taste differently due to the amount of time the wine spent on the lees. For vintage wines, the date tells you exactly how many years they were stored on lees. For non-vintage wines, the disgorgement date can give you an idea of the age of the wine, which may not be stated on the bottle.

Alexandre Chartogne disgorging a bottle of Les Barres. Maybe not perfectly, but it was delicious nonetheless!

Champagne Spécial Club

Champagne's Spécial Club is a group of grower/producers who all have a common goal of promoting the expression of terroir. The members serve as a jury of their peers, voting for the best champagnes of certain vintages, which is put into a stout bottle only to be used by those that make the mark. These are truly sparklers of exceptional quality and value!

Moscatel Sherry Light, sweet and floral from the muscat (or muscatel) grape, mostly grown in the town of Chipiona in Jerez, Spain. Moscatel Pasas (where grapes are first dried) are dark in color with a richer, more concentrated flavor.

Tokaji A Hungarian sweet wine from botrytis affected grape varieties furmint and hárslevelű. Aszú is the sweet, concentrated juice from botrytized grapes and it is added to a regulated portion of base wine. The amount of Aszú in the final wine is measured from 1 to 6 puttonyos, with 6 puttonyos being the sweetest and richest. A wine over 6 puttonyos, with sugar levels of 180 - 450g/l, is called Aszú Essencia. Aszú Essencia is made only in the best vintages and ages very well.

Coteaux du Layon In the Loire Valley of France sits this AOC for sweet white wines made from chenin blanc. The grapes are harvested very ripe, often developing noble rot or partially drying on the vine. Bonnezeaux and Chaume have their own AOC's within the Coteaux du Layon and the crème de la crème, Quarts de Chaume, is its own AOC within the Chaume AOC.

Sauternes This well known dessert wine comes from Bordeaux, France. Here, sémillon and sauvignon blanc grapes have their sugars and acidity concentrated when the fungus botrytis cinerea attacks. This phenomenon, known as Noble Rot, results in sweet wines of great complexity. Sauternes was part of the great 1855 classification of Bordeaux houses - Deuxièmes Crus Classés (Second Growths), Premier Crus Classés (First Growths) and a sole Premier Cru Supérieur (Superior First Growth)... Château d'Yquem.

Beerenauslese / Trockenbeerenauslese Germany produces some of the most sophisticated and complex sweet wines of the world. Beerenauslese is made from carefully selected late harvest grapes, usually affected by noble rot. Trockenbeerenauslese is made from the ripest grapes, all which have been effected by noble rot. While these wines contain lots of sugar, the cool German climate keeps the acidity high and the wines perfectly balanced.

Sélection de Grains Nobles Most notably from Alsace with similar wines made in other areas of France, these wines are made from hand selected grapes affected by noble rot. Concentrated flavors with a nice acid backbone.

Ice Wine Wine made from frozen grapes. The frozen grapes are pressed and the ice removed, thus concentrating the flavors of the musts left over. The freezing can be achieved on the vine in very cold climates or you can simulate the same process by putting grapes in a freezer right after harvesting.

Dried Drying grapes, usually by lying out in the sun, concentrates their sugars to produce sweet wines. This type of wine is produced all over the world. Passito, Recioto and Vin Santo are dried grape wines styles from Italy. Vin de Paille is a wine made from grapes dried on straw mats in the Jura region of France. Ruppum comes from the French island of Corsica, and Marsala producer Marco de Bartoli makes dried moscato (known as zibibbo locally) on the small island of Pantelleria.

Pineau de Charentes / Floc de Gascogne In Southern France, these wines are enjoyed as an apéritif. They are also nice with desserts containing nuts or dried fruit. Pineau is made by adding cognac to naturally sweet unfermented Marsala Marsala gets its name from the town in Sicily it surrounds. Marsala wines are fortified with alcohol and are blended during aging. Fortification was originally done for the wines to survive long voyages to England in the 1700's. Not to be missed are the Marsalas from Marco de Bartoli, perhaps the most innovative producer in the area. His Vecchio Samperi is actually unfortified, as it reaches an alcohol level of 15% naturally. Even though this is how Marsala was made traditionally, these days it technically can not be labelled "Marsala."

Madeira Made on the Madeira Islands, part of Portugal but far off its coast, Madeira wines were fortified and shipped across the world in the 1800's. During this voyage the wines were exposed to the sun's heat and ocean's air, cooking and oxidizing the wine before it got to the new world. The resulting wine was very popular and now Madeira is intentionally heated and oxidized after fortification, producing flavors of dried fruits, nuts and caramel. The wines vary in sweetness. The Sercial grape produces the driest style, Verdelho medium dry, Bual medium sweet and Malvasia the richest. Terrantez tends to be medium dry and is not produced much today, and Bastardo these days can only be tasted if you are lucky (you are!) Vintage Madeira aged more than 20 years in cask is called Frasqueira.

Port Port is a fortified wine made in the Douro Valley in Portugal. It is made mostly with red grapes in a variety of styles but a small amount of white port is also produced. Ruby ports are bright and fruity. Quality tawny port ages in wood for a period of time and oxidizes slightly, resulting in lighter color wines with more nut and chocolate aromas than fresh berries. Colheita Port comes from a single vintage and is aged in wood (minimum 8 years) just before bottling. The resulting wine is similar to a Tawny Port but with more complexity. Vintage Port is bottled early (after just 18 months - 3 years) without filtering. It requires long periods of time in the bottle to go from full, rich and tannic to softer, more complex wines.

pajarete (paxarete)—A sweet, fortified wine, typically employing arrope or sancocho in its blend. Originally from mountainous vineyards east of Jerez, near the towns of Prado del Rey and Villamartín, it was popular from the seventeenth through the nineteenth centuries, with imitations created in both Jerez and Málaga. Its production declined sharply following the phylloxera invasion, and it is virtually nonexistent today.

Pedro Ximénez Made from pedro ximénez grapes that have been dried in the sun to concentrate their sugars. They are sweet and luscious. PX gets lighter in body as it ages and older vintages are velvety in the mouth.
